Research Assistants typically attend lab meetings, test subjects, assist with library research and data coding, and participate in data discussion and analyses. Advanced research assistants might have opportunities to be involved in the process of planning, implementing, and presenting research projects (e.g., honors thesis projects, conference presentations).

Why would you like to work in this laboratory? Indicate which of our research areas you are interested in pursuing

What are your professional goals? If you intend to pursue graduate school, please provide a general area and explain why you would like to go into a graduate program.

Do you have any previous research experience in Psychology? Outside Psychology? If so, please list and provide references.

Lab work typically requires 8-10 h per week. Are you capable of devoting that amount of time to working in the lab each week? Would you be able to work in the lab in the early morning and/or on weekends?

We typically accept students with a 1-year commitment. Could you commit to working in the lab for more than one semester?

Please provide any additional information that you believe is important to your application.
